Get Your Summer On

Back in the day, winter time in Colorado was the most popular season for visitors. In recent years, the warm summer months have proven equally enticing, thanks in large part to the vast number of outdoor activities in beautiful settings. But now, we've recently learned, Colorado's "other seasons" – spring and fall – are a huge draw for travelers. There are so many reasons why people love coming here, whether to participate in sports ... or watch some sports, hike the beautiful outdoors ... or meander among the walkable city, partake in great food, craft beer and cocktails (or, um, that other indulgence), browse among galleries galore or anything else that gets you to your happy place.

It's no longer just skiing in the mountains or shopping in the city. Our state has grown up; we're beloved by foodies, art lovers and outdoor enthusiasts. Whether you're here for business or fun (or possibly both), visitors don't need to remain in just one place. There is adventure and enjoyment waiting in every pocket of this beautiful state, including wonderful golf courses, first-rate biking and hiking trails, our very own wine country and innumerable great restaurants, breweries, distilleries, galleries and boutiques.

But wait, there's more! For some reason (okay, maybe it's a little obvious), musicians and artists LOVE to perform here. While Red Rocks Amphitheatre is always the place to hear first-rate music, Colorado mountain towns offer their own special vibe, where great sounds can be savored in an enchanting outdoor setting under the sun or stars amid a beautiful mountain backdrop.

But back to summer, because now you're here and you're ready for some true Colorado fun. We promise to show you how to make the most of your stay. Eric Elkins, our resident food and drink expert, offers his fresh take on the best places for brunch al fresco, a highly prized local tradition. Move over Denver Omelette, because the food and wine suggestions he invites you to enjoy will make you want to extend your stay at least one more weekend.

Colorado is a leader in the craft brewery scene, and Monica Stockbridge took one for the team to come up with a special list of the state's top breweries, distilleries and cideries. You'll definitely recognize a few of them, but I'm pretty sure you're going to want to venture a bit further to check out some of the special venues she describes for you.

And then there's art. This is Colorado and yes, we love our art. From funky and eye-catching street art (and here we're not just talking any run-of-the-mill amateur-hour art) to compelling paintings by highly respected local artists, we truly are an artsy bunch. Writer Jamie Siebrase makes it easy for you to experience the local scene, with a great guide to the art neighborhoods and the artists who are part of the landscape.

We also have compiled a lineup of some of our favorite summer festivals ... just in case you're worried you'll have nothing to do. So read on and plan a special stay – and don't be afraid to venture out for some memorable Colorado fun.

Welcome to Colorful Colorado!

RED LEDGES' DECADE OF DIVIDENDS

It all started at Utah's Dixie College in the 1960s. Tony Burns had married a Heber Valley girl, Joyce, whose family was prominent in the valley. Together they watched the growth of neighboring Park City and saw potential.

"When I was living in Miami and working as CEO of a Fortune 500 company, I loved being able to get away to the Rockies to ski or to escape from the heat – and to get there without the hassles of connecting flights or a long drive," said Tony. "I could – and still can – leave the East Coast at noon and be in Park City before dinner."

Today, the Rocky Mountain community at Red Ledges offers a private sanctuary (with best-in-class amenities like GOLF Magazine's "Best New Private Course in America" of 2009) where you can get to Park City, Deer Valley, Soldier Hollow (Olympic cross country) and Sundance in about 20 minutes and the Salt Lake City (SLC) airport in 45, but can get away from the resort crowds when fun time turns to relaxing time.

"Red Ledges is my father's brainchild," said Mitchel Burns, Red Ledges' COO. "He started acquiring the land 33 years ago. It took 27 different transactions to assemble this collection of property. Honestly, he's been dreaming about it for 40 years."

Allen Kennedy

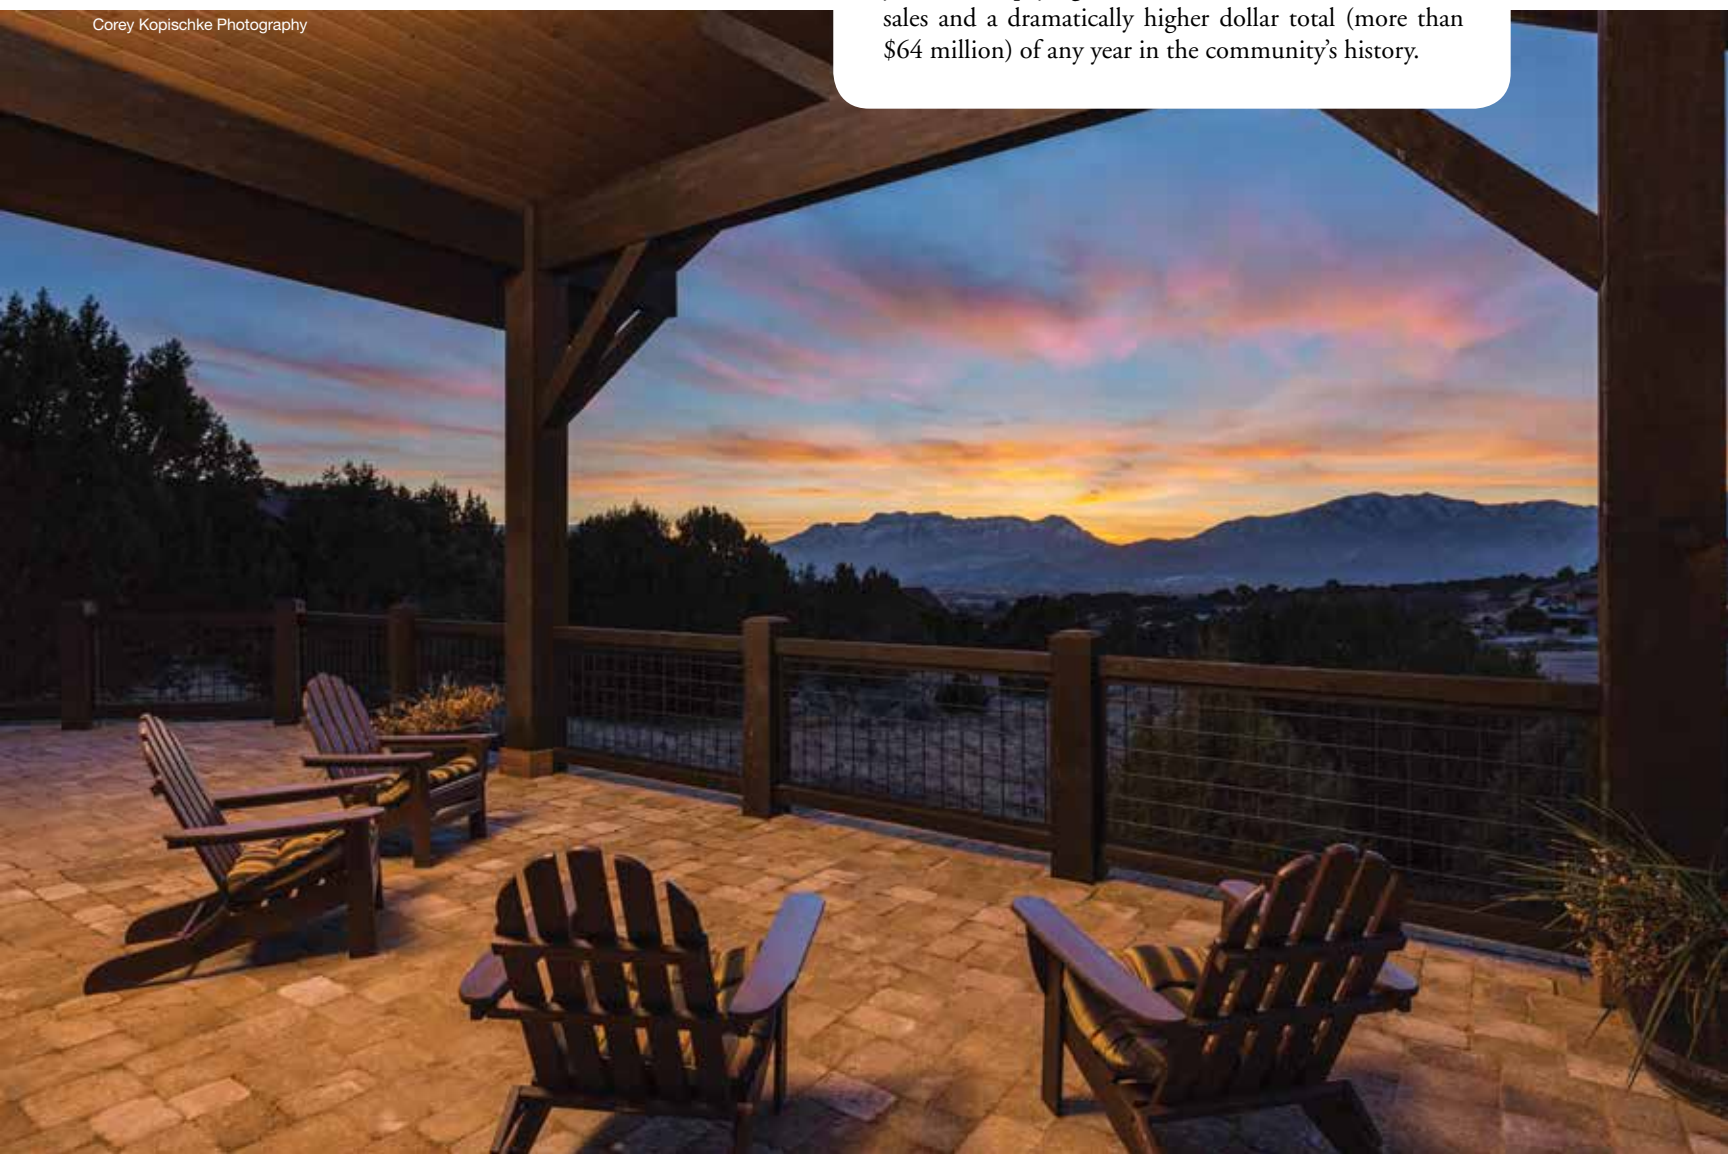

Welden C. Andersen

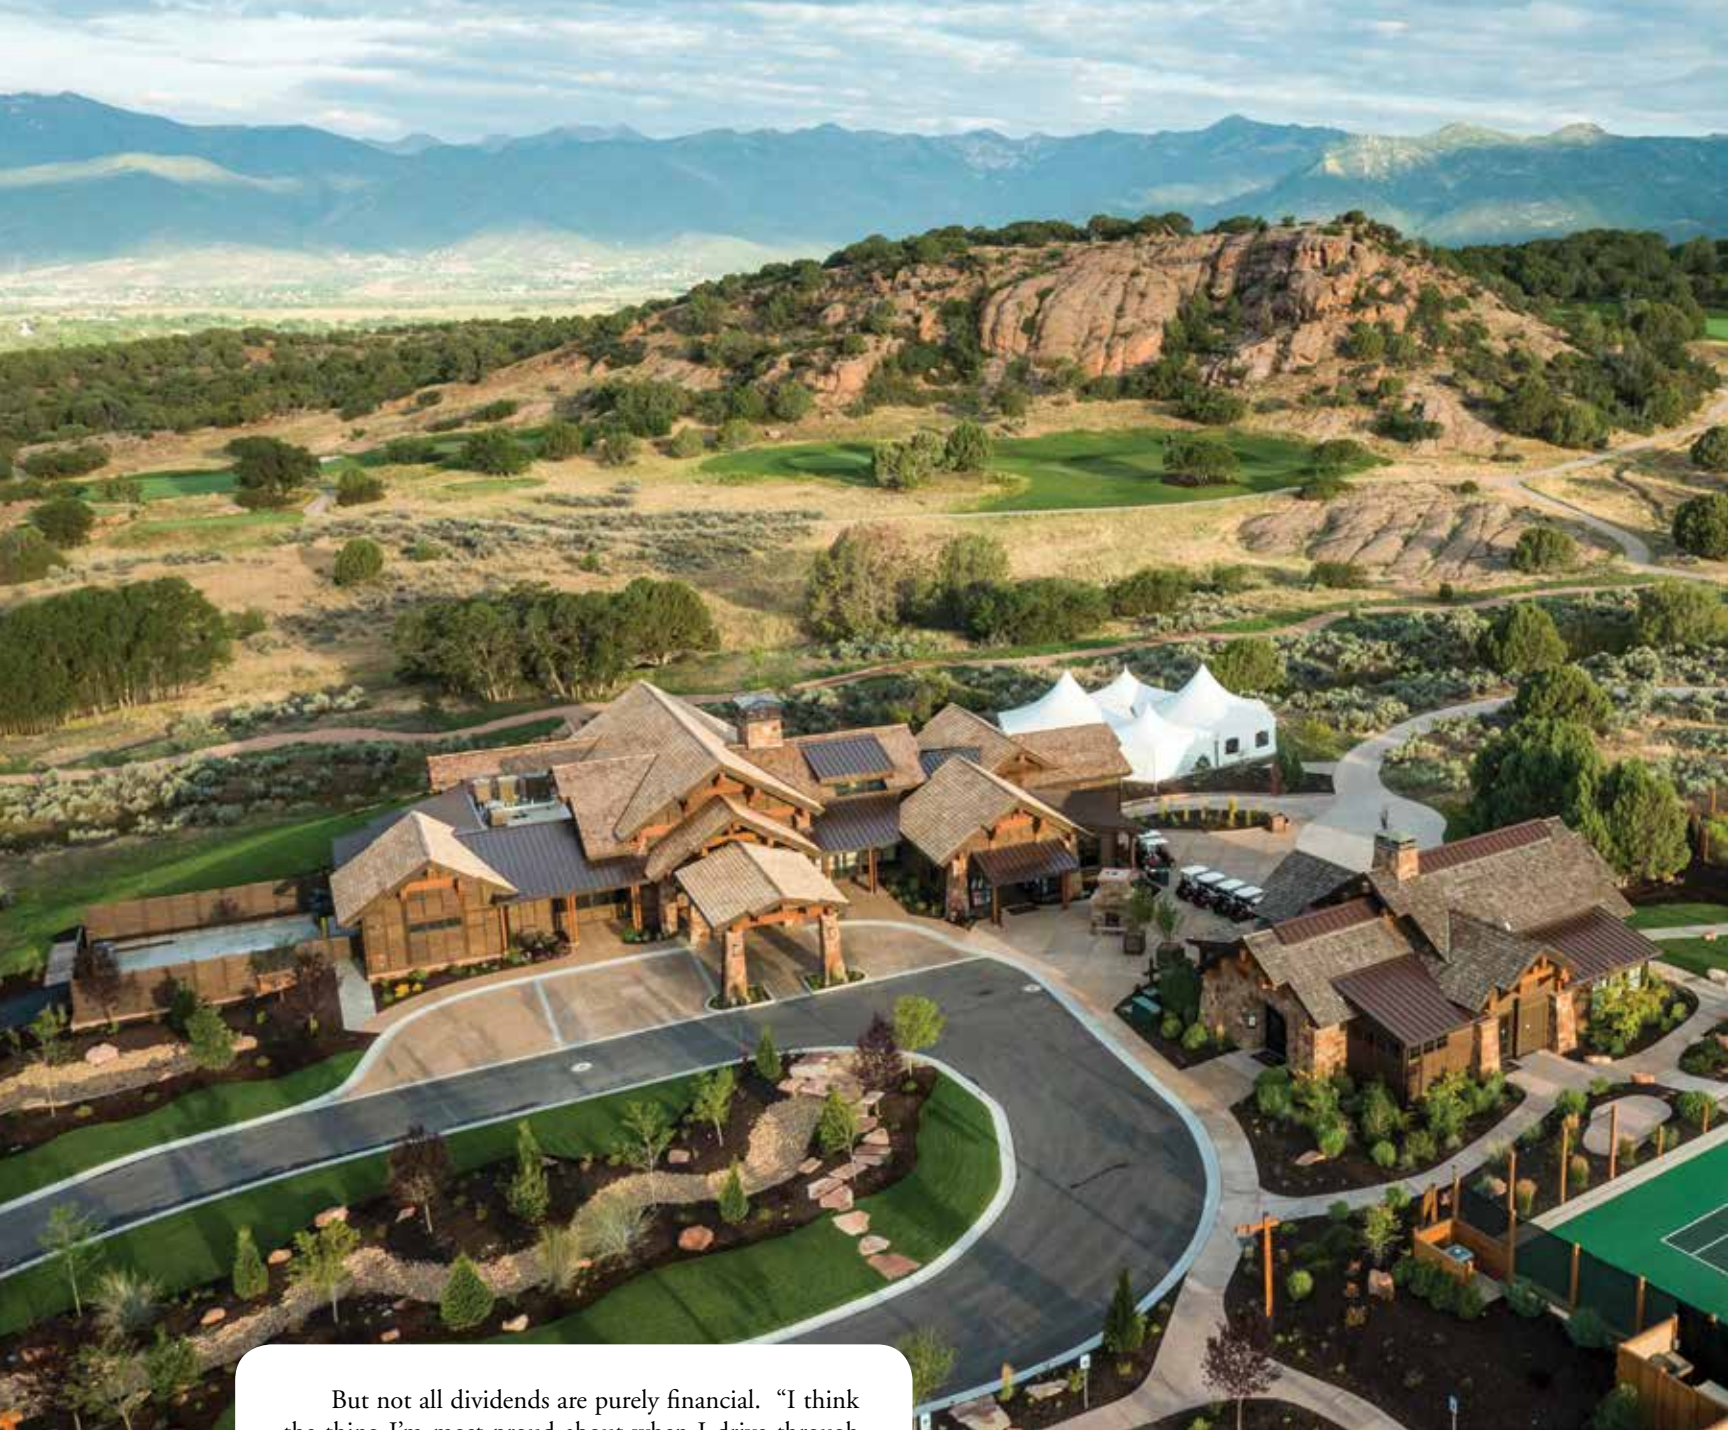

Tony, the long-time CEO of Ryder Systems, reached out to Nolan Archibald, who was both a fellow Dixie College alum and a fellow Fortune 500 CEO (Stanley-Black & Decker) to begin planning a community on the 2,000 acres of mountain and valley he had acquired.

The vision for a best-in-class mountain community evolved with the dreams and desires of its owners and members. Superior outdoor amenities take full advantage of the world-renowned topography and scenery of the Park City / Heber Valley region, where winter sports make way for trail and water activities and a vibrant, four-season lifestyle.

In 2017, Red Ledges celebrated a decade of success. Their Jack Nicklaus Signature course had debuted to national acclaim, winning GOLF Magazine's "Best New Private Course in America" award. Over 500 properties have been sold, there are more than 160 completed homes, cabins and cottages, and nearly 100 more are in construction or design. The prudent plan has evolved the past 10 years, and is paying dividends: 2017 saw more real estate sales and a dramatically higher dollar total (more than $64 million) of any year in the community's history.

Corey Kopischke Photography

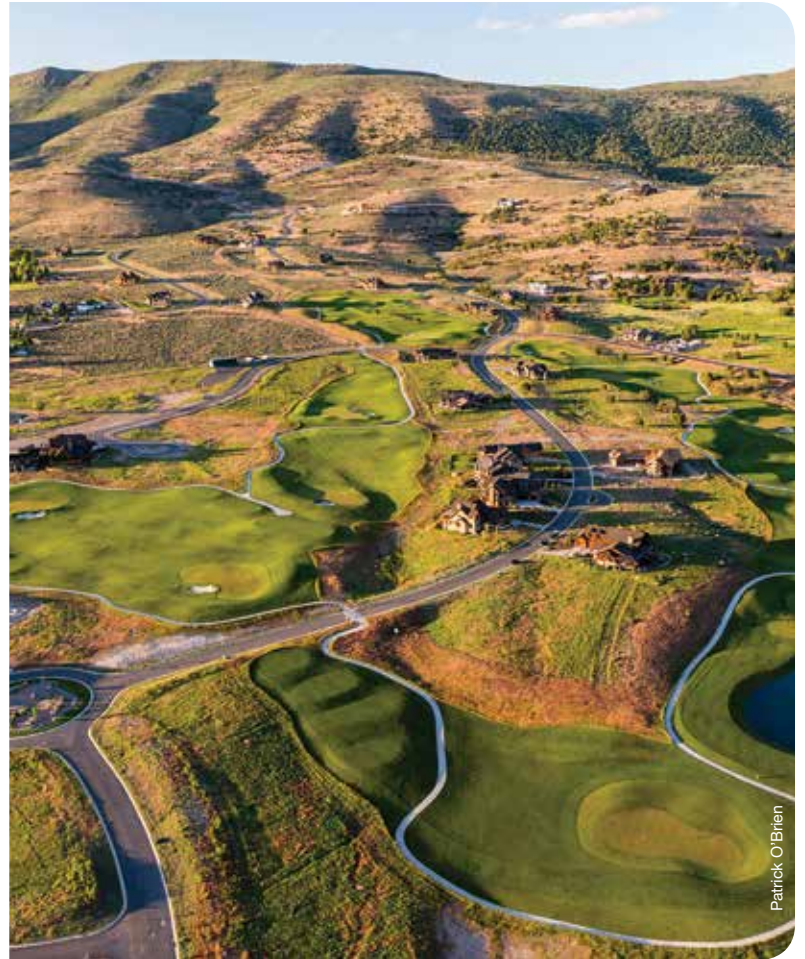

But not all dividends are purely financial. “I think the thing I’m most proud about when I drive through Red Ledges today is to see the total level of activity that’s taking place,” said Tony. “We’re building additional amenities, and beneath it all I like the attitude and the energy. And the excitement of the new Red Ledges families when they’re building their home, that’s a lot of fun to see.”

Red Ledges’ October, 2017 “birthday” was commemorated with the groundbreaking of a Village Center, complete with pool, hydro-playground, and casual family bistro. The first quarter of 2018 saw yet another record for real estate sales, a strong endorsement of the founders’ vision of a decade ago. And as always, the founding partners’ core philosophies – designing with nature, prudent development, family-focus – will continue to guide the community in Red Ledges’ second decade.

National Magazine Selects Red Ledges for Their 2018 “Ideal Home”

Ideal Living, the quarterly real estate and lifestyle magazine that has helped thousands of vacation and retirement buyers find their dream property, has chosen to put its national Fall 2018 “Ideal Home” at Red Ledges.

“Ideal Living magazine is excited to feature the Fall 2018 Ideal Home in Red Ledges, the first home we’ve featured in the Rocky Mountains,” said Kelly Godbey, the national magazine’s Editor-in-Chief. “Red Ledges was chosen as it exemplifies the ideal lifestyle through its outstanding amenities, incredible views, and stunning architecture. We are certain that this Utah community will resonate with Ideal Living readers.”

The cottage is currently being built at 264 N. Kings Peak Court, under the supervision of Red Ledges Land Development’s new construction arm. See the cottage’s many features here: (<https://www.redledges.com/real-estate/property/286-n-kings-peak-court/>), and look for the Fall 2018 issue of Ideal Living later this year!

TRANSFORM YOUR SPACE

CURATING ART FOR YOUR HOME

However you decide to curate for your inner-sanctum, let it reflect your personality and show yet another side to how you love to live.

By Kristen Muller, LIV Sotheby's International Realty

Your home serves as the outward expression of your inner-self, something of a vessel for your spirit. To capture that essence, clear structure, a thoughtful palette, and ambient lighting hold key roles; but it's what you display in this space that makes it unique. Curating art for this blank slate is what makes a home uniquely yours.

Perhaps you're a strategist, focusing on pieces with a kind of visual mathematical precision; maybe you're a minimalist, preferring one or two bespoke pieces where the light hits them just so; or it could be that you're a bona fide enthusiast, peppering your dwelling with an eclectic mix of oils and photography, not to mention a strategically-placed sculpture or two.

If you're unsure of where to start when it comes to art, you're in luck—the home itself is one the best starting points when looking for curation clues. After all, everything from the white quartz of kitchen counters to industrial-chic finishing touches can inform your art collection. Consider your abode a look book for inspiration, and transform it from blank slate to bespoke gallery. No gallery-white walls necessary.

All properties shown are listed for sale by LIV Sotheby's International Realty. Please call 303.893.3200 for more information.

576 S. Elizabeth Street, Denver. $12,950,000

IDENTIFY YOUR TASTE

Some things in life speak to you, and you alone, and that can lead to feeling torn between aesthetic aspirations and authentic representation when decorating your home. In theory, you may love the idea of sharp, mod looks and lines, but in practice, find yourself choosing bold colors and organic shapes.

The same can be true of art curation. You may admire the broken grid gallery walls in a recent issue of *Wallpaper, yet in a gallery, you're drawn to a single, enveloping piece commanding the space. Instead of trying to conform to an idea of what should be into your home, consider what instinctually draws you in.

PLAY MATCHMAKER

You have this room in your house that's truly magnetic. When friends and family are introduced, they immediately get it. There's something about the way the furniture frames the window, or textures you've added throughout—it simply works. Now you just need to add some final polish by finding that perfect finishing touch.

When you're searching for new pieces to fit the bill, bring mementos of your favorite rooms with you—think photos, fabrics, swatches, or even small hardware. Trained in the art of curation, gallery directors can help create an encompassing artistic voice for your space from similar textures, colors, or cues. Sometimes the smallest slice of similarity is a match worth marrying.

FOCUS ON MOOD

How do you want to feel when you walk into a room? Elated? Relaxed? Inspired? Just as you took great care in finding a home with an infinity pool to end your days on a mellow note, equal attention should be given when seeking poolside art to complement it. Perhaps the wave-like quality of a smooth marble sculpture reminds you of peaceful shores, or maybe the mirrored shards of a mixed-media piece in the library help shift your focus to self-reflection.

You can embrace, amplify, or transform moods with the right curated collection. Art can shape not only how a room looks, but also how it makes you feel.

FRAME IT RIGHT

Framing your new favorite piece isn't simply about the physical frame. In fact, your burgeoning collection may not require wall mounting at all—it's about how it works within the space. Great arrangements draw in the eye and invite it to explore nearby, but they continually loop you back to a focal point.

Decide what you want the focal point in your room to be. It doesn't have to be the art, but it could be a breathtaking view, elegant handcrafted side table, or even a prominent lighting fixture. Wherever you want your eye to start and finish, frame it with complementary—but not overpowering—furnishings and works, so you keep coming back to your favorite spot.

Doing Business in Colorado

An East Coast Transplant Explains Lessons Learned by Dr. Ali Hill

In February of 2015 my husband and I traveled from New York to Denver for a friend's wedding. The celebration was downtown, and we were excited to relive some of our pre-kids, city life for a few days.

From the moment we arrived, we noticed something that felt unfamiliar to our New York/Boston sensibilities. Everywhere we went, people were smiling, friendly and polite. The energy around us was invigorating. We looked at each other and wondered, "What is this strange place?"

As entrepreneurs, we were always on the hunt for innovation, intelligence, and hustle, and we seemed to have landed smack in the middle of all these things in Denver.

To make a very long story short, by June 2015 we'd sold our house in New York, bought a house here, registered the kids for school and camp, and packed up and moved across the country.

Along with our kids, dog, turtle, and personal belongings, we also brought our business. We knew we needed to start meeting people quickly, since our business, like most, is relationship-driven.

As a sociologist, I understood that being in a new culture meant there would be differences across every aspect of our lives, especially in business. While I was prepared to acclimate to the changes, what I could not anticipate of course, was exactly what they would be.

Over the past three years, I've learned a lot about doing business here, including:

1. On-time in Denver is late. When people set a time for a meeting, they actually start at that time. Show up a few minutes early wherever you go, and you will fit right in. Show up "fashionably late" and plan to play catch-up on what you've missed.
2. Prepare to share. I don't mean splitting a pastry at a coffee meeting. I mean, be prepared to share about your hobbies, your pets, if/where you ski, which marathons and Ironmans you have done, etc. It is possible you will spend more than 50 percent of your time in a first meeting with someone – even a business meeting – on these details. Don't feel this is a waste of time – these connections may turn into business after they get to know you.
3. Bring a business card. While these pieces of paper aren't as big a deal back East, they're old-school here about your marketing collateral. I've seen people do a card swap before even starting the meeting! Take time to make a card – you won't regret it.
4. Soften your approach. We East Coast types are used to a more direct communication style than is customary here. By all means be authentic, transparent and ask what you need to know, just be a bit subtler in your delivery.
5. Respect the work rhythm. While it's tough for us East Coasters to grasp at first, there is real value in "working to live" rather than "living to work." Working with people who have a life outside their careers is a huge asset. View this as an opportunity rather than a challenge.

Whether you're here for the first time, in the midst of a relocation, or somewhere in between, I can assure you Denver is the place to be. It's an exciting time to be here in Colorado, and Denver gets better every day. Enjoy!

When traveling, it's always fun to experience something a bit out of the ordinary. Here are a couple of fun dining venues that are just one more example of why Colorado is as entertaining as it is beautiful.

Dinner and a Whodunit

Spice up your fun factor at The Dinner Detective, America's largest interactive murder mystery comedy show. Enjoy a four-course plated dinner while working together to solve a hilarious murder case. Just beware, the killer is hiding somewhere in the room – and you may even find yourself as the prime suspect.

The Dinner Detective Murder Mystery Dinner Show performs select Saturday nights and is different from any other dinner theater, interactive show or murder mystery show you've ever seen. Non-costumed actors are hidden within the audience and pretend to be regular guests. During the course of the evening, the detectives will arrive, uncover clues, interrogate audience members and help everyone solve the mystery. The audience member who gives the best correct answer to solve the mystery walks away with a KILLER prize package. All tickets include the show, dinner and prizes for the winners. Wait-staff gratuity is even included.

Be An Art Groupie

by Jamie Siebrase

Colorado has an impressive number of nationally recognized artists. Here we look at three top talents who provide even more reason to fall in love with the state's distinctive brand of breathtaking art.

Born in New York City in 1949, watercolorist William Matthews (williammatthewsstudio.com) started out in Los Angeles, designing album covers for Warner Bros. and Capitol Records. After a five-year layover in Europe and a decade-long stint running a graphic design studio in Colorado, Matthews began painting full-time, and has since become known for his energetic watercolor depictions of the American West. Lauded for his portrayal of working cowboys from the great American ranches, Matthews has spent decades exploring the Great Basin, finding inspiration in high-desert landscapes, everyday gauchos, and everything in between. William Matthews' artwork has graced the walls of numerous private and public collections, from Joslyn Art Museum and the Museum of the American West to Phoenix Art Museum, the National Cowboy Hall of Fame, and the Denver Art Museum, among others. Matthews' work can also be viewed at William Matthews Studio, 2540 Walnut St.

William Matthews

Denver native Carrie Fell (carriefellgallery.com) has been a staple in the national art scene for two decades, garnering praise for her bold reimagining of traditional Western scenes. A welcome departure from conventional style, Fell's dramatic use of color and line tell the age-old stories of cowboys and girls, longhorns, horses, and the infinite, starlit sky. Fell studied interior design before beginning her professional career as an artist in 1985, and remnants of her early training are inherent in her art, which spans a variety of media, including paintings, limited-edition prints, and sculpture. Fell's pieces have been incorporated into individual, corporate, and institutional collections throughout North America and abroad, and the artist exhibits year-round in galleries and museums. Locally, you can find Fell's work at Horton Fine Art in Beaver Creek, and at the Carrie Fell Fine Art Gallery, 7302 South Alton Way, in Centennial.

Cowboys by Carrie Fell

Trained at ArtCenter College of Design, Duke Beardsley (dukebeardsleystudio.com) is a sixth-generation Coloradan who has been drawing and painting the American West for as long as he can remember. Beardsley split his boyhood years between Denver and a 1,000-acre cattle ranch, and the dualities of his upbringing give way to an unexpected melding of traditional western iconography and contemporary art. Beardsley's art is authentic because he rides horseback with crews to observe and document today's working cowboys and girls in their natural element. Beardsley's art is included in notable private and corporate collections, including The Ritz-Carlton, UMB Banks, the Booth Western Art Museum, and the Denver Art Museum.

Play Your Way Through a Colorado Summer

Our Top Picks for Festivals and Fun

by Rebecca Treon

Summer is one of Colorado's most beautiful seasons, when warm weather beckons us outside to enjoy all the state has to offer, from high-country adventure to the bustle of the city. Festivals abound both in the Mile High City and further afield, offering everything from live music to food and wine — all with the purpose of bringing community together for an immersive experience. We've gathered some of the state's notable summer festivals below.

Denver Chalk Art Festival

Denver Chalk Art Festival

June 2-3 in Larimer Square

Denver Chalk Art Festival follows street painting traditions that originated in 16th century Renaissance Italy when artists began transforming asphalt into canvas using chalk. The artists were called “madonnari,” after their customary practice of recreating chalk paintings of the Madonna. Historically, madonnari were known for their life of travel and freedom, making their living from coins received from passersby. Along with the hundreds of visual artists you'll see creating masterpieces along Larimer Square, there will also be a selection of talented musicians on hand. www.larimerarts.org

The Four Corners Folk Festival has hosted the likes of Los Lobos and Bela Fleck; Pagosa Folk 'N Bluegrass has featured the Tony Furtado Trio and the Lil Smokies, among others. Craft

The Craft
Breweries, Distilleries
and Cideries
That Make
Our State
GREAT

by Monica Parpal Stockbridge

Colorado is known for its Rocky Mountains, constant sunshine and friendly people. It's also known to have an outstanding craft beer and spirits scene.

Colorado encompasses more than 300 craft breweries within its borders — a number second only to California — and boasts 8.4 breweries per capita. What's more, new distilleries are opening their doors every day, and a growing collection of local cideries is bringing renewed attention to apple-based wine. Craft brewers and distillers cite clean, quality water, abundant local ingredients from potatoes to peaches, and a craft-loving community as ingredients for success. Colorado's craft beverage scene truly does offer something for all who choose to imbibe.

Here, we raise a toast to nationally known trailblazers, taprooms worthy of an in-state road trip, and a few of our favorite Colorado distilleries. Drink up!

7 Big Craft Brewery Mainstays

Colorado is known as the beer capital of the country, and for good reason. In fact, many of our homegrown breweries have made a name for themselves beyond our borders. And while they have grown in size and production, each started with a love of the craft. When visiting the state, paying a visit to one of these big breweries will give you an idea of what an established brewery looks like — with some delicious and renowned beers, too.

New Belgium Brewery

500 Linden St., Fort Collins

(970) 221-0524

newbelgium.com

Few breweries have the longevity and continued popularity of New Belgium Brewery. This Fort Collins mainstay's diverse portfolio ranges from the iconic Fat Tire to the revamped Voodoo Ranger series, to the wood-aged Sour and Wood Cellar Reserve releases. New Belgium prides itself on being a brand trusted to deliver quality products. Beyond that, New Belgium prioritizes philanthropy and sustainability by tapping into wind and solar energy, and diverting 99.9 percent of their waste from landfills. Stop by their tasting room, the Liquid Center, and ask about the more than 20 beers on tap that day. Or, book a tour of the facility (as far in advance as possible) and experience what USA Today calls "the best brewery tour in the country". Visit New Belgium every Friday in the summer for live music, and don't miss the Tour de Fat, the brewery's annual outdoor parade and jubilant beer party happening on Aug 25 in Denver, and on September 1 in Fort Collins.

Summer sips: Revel in the rotating Tartastic fruit beer series; or revisit a classic with the Fat Tire Belgian White. And because Colorado loves its hoppy beers, don't miss a taste of the Hemperor HPA brewed with both hops and hemp.

Oskar Blues Brewing

multiple locations

oskarblues.com

You know that can of craft beer in your hand? You can credit Oskar Blues Brewing for blazing that trail when they canned their Dale's Pale Ale in 2002 while operating out of their original space in Lyons, Colorado. Now with breweries in Longmont, Austin, Boulder and Brevard, North Carolina, Oskar Blues is able to spread its craft brew legacy beyond the Rockies. If you're in Denver, swing by Oskar Blues Grill & Brew, ChuBurger, or HotBox Roasters Cafe to expand your palate beyond hops and barley.

Summer sips: Knock back a Dale's Pale Ale flagship brew, or try the Pinner Throwback IPA for a big hop taste at a sessionable 4.9% ABV.

Left Hand Brewing

1265 Boston Ave., Longmont

(303) 772-0258

lefthandbrewing.com

Raise your hand if you know how many years Left Hand Brewery has been in business. If you guessed 25, you get a left-handed high five. Left Hand is one of the oldest craft breweries in Colorado, and most famous for their Milk Stout Nitro, America's Stout — its claim to fame since 2011. This employee-owned brewery is all about giving back to the community, and has raised over $2.9 million since 2008 for the National MS Society. On a visit to this brewery, don't miss tasting that famous nitro milk stout straight from the tap. Another award-winning brew? The Sawtooth amber ale, a favorite since 1993. This August, the Left Hand Brewing Foundation will present the 8th annual Leftapalooza Mile High Tribute Band Competition for an ultimate music and craft beer experience.

Summer sips: The Juicy Goodness, a dry-hopped golden ale, is the perfect summer brew worthy of a left-handed thumbs up.

Avery Brewing

4910 Nautilus Ct. N., Boulder
(303) 440-4324
averybrewing.com

Avery Brewing is also celebrating a quarter-century birthday this year. In fact, founder Adam Avery first brewed his India Pale Ale back in 1996, long before hoppy beers were popular. Today, their new facility in Gunbarrel — a neighborhood in Boulder — complete with lab, sensory department and massive barrel program has given them plenty of room to grow. Be sure to try their flagship brew, the White Rascal Belgian-style white ale. Hop-heads will love The Maharaja, a high-potency imperial IPA, and the sour-curious should try the Raspberry Sour, aged in oak barrels. Mark your calendars for their 25th anniversary party on August 4, when you can experience live music, food, and lots of Avery beer. Follow Avery on Facebook to learn more.

Summer sips: Visit Avery for their release of the Go Play IPA, an aromatic and moderately bitter IPA that is dosed with electrolytes, making it the perfect beer for your company's summer kickball league.

Breckenridge Brewery

2920 Brewery Ln., Littleton
(303) 623-2739
breckbrew.com

Breckenridge Brewery opened in 1990. As the third-oldest craft brewery in the state, now with pubs in Breckenridge and Littleton, Breckenridge Brewery serves well-balanced beers and notable hospitality. While special small-batch beers are always available at the brewery, visitors to Colorado are often pleased to find “Breck” beer in their local liquor stores back home thanks to their nationwide distribution. The Vanilla Porter has been known to turn heads, recognizable for its roasty, vanilla nuance. “Craft beer drinkers like the uniqueness of it, and we also find a lot of self-proclaimed non-beer-drinkers even go for Vanilla Porter,” says Todd Usry, president of Breckenridge Brewery. Breckenridge Brewery's annual music and beer “Hootenanny” will celebrate the brewery's anniversary at the 15-acre Littleton location on July 7, with eight bands on two stages.

Summer sips: Don't miss the Summer Pils, a balanced beer made with Czech and American hops with a soft mouth feel and a dry finish.

Odell Brewing

800 E. Lincoln Ave., Fort Collins
(970) 498-9070
odellbrewing.com

Another longtime Fort Collins staple, Odell Brewing (opened in 1989) was originally operated out of a 1915 grain elevator. Today it's in the top 50-largest craft breweries in the country, and remains a beloved Fort Collins tradition. Their pilot system is a “playground” for developing new, interesting beers in small batches, such as the Girls to the Yard, a hoppy, unfiltered “milkshake” IPA brewed with lactose, with peach, pear and pineapple notes.

Summer sips: Try the Rupture IPA, made by grinding the whole hop and releasing the precious oils within.

Great Divide Brewery

2201 Arapahoe St., Denver
(303) 296-9460
greatdivide.com

Founded in 1994 in Denver's Ballpark neighborhood, Great Divide has grown to become one of the country's most recognized and decorated breweries. With 18 Great American Beer Festival medals and 5 World Beer Cup awards to their name, Great Divide is known for its assertive yet balanced brews, such as the Colette Farmhouse Ale, Titan IPA, and Yeti Imperial Stout. Now with a second location, The Barrel Bar, in River North (RiNo), Great Divide has even more space for large-scale production, canning, and even massive in-brewery yoga classes.

Summer sips: Look for the limited-release Hazy IPA on tap, or try the new, year-round Heyday IPA, with notes of tropical fruit, berry and melon — perfect for a hot Mile-High summer day.

9 Notable Breweries Beyond Denver

While Denver has its share of noteworthy breweries, it's a good idea to venture beyond the city limits in search of interesting beers made in interesting places, whether it's in a century-old barn, a well-known ski town, or at the base of a mountain bike trail. Here are our picks for breweries beyond Colorado's capital.

New Terrain Brewing, Golden, CO

16401 Table Mountain Pkwy., Golden

(720) 697-7848

newterrainbrewing.com

Located in Golden, Colorado, New Terrain Brewery operates under a manifesto to brew the best beer they can, and enjoy the adventures in discovering those brews in the process. With more than 17 rotating handles, there's always something new to try. House favorites include the Golden Haze, a New England IPA; the Suntrip, a Belgian Wit and 2017 GABF Silver Medal Winner, and the Rise & Climb, a German Kolsch Style.

Casey Brewing and Blending

3421 Grand Ave., Glenwood Springs

(970) 230-9691

caseybrewing.com

Small but mighty, Casey Brewing and Blending focuses solely on barrel-aged sour beers. "By putting 100-percent of our time and attention into those styles, it allows us to put out something that is truly special," says owner, brewer and blender Troy Casey, who fell in love with this style of beer in 2009. "To me, there's magic left in these styles." That's because he can put the same beer into two different barrels and end up with different flavors, all depending on the barrel's history and the beer's terroir. The majority of his beers are made with Colorado ingredients from local farmers. Then, the beer ferments in vintage oak barrels previously used for storing wine. To visit the brewery, book a private tour and tasting in advance for the first or third weekend of the month. Casey will celebrate its four-year anniversary during the first weekend of July, with specialty beers brewed with blackberries, peaches, red wine grapes and nectarines.

Elevation Beer Company

115 Pahlone Pkwy., Poncha Springs

(719) 539-5258

elevationbeerco.com

Elevation Beer Co. is all about venturing beyond your limits, whether that's exploring the peaks surrounding Poncha Springs, or stepping beyond the world of macro-brewed light lagers. Keg Orator Andy Astor says their diverse taproom crowd, which ranges from "salt of the earth ranchers, to beer geeks, to outdoors enthusiasts, to urbanites escaping the crowds, all convening over a pint and some friendly conversation." The world-class mountain biking, skiing, fishing, boating, and hiking opportunities within a stone's throw of the brewery don't hurt, either. Try the 8 Second Kolsch, the Elevation Pilsner, or the Belgian Quad brewed with local honey and aged in Infinite Monkey Theorem red wine barrels. "It drinks like a nice ruby port," Astor says.

Courtesy of Broken Compass Brewing

Broken Compass Brewing

68 Continental Ct., Breckenridge

(970) 368-2772

brokencompassbrewing.com

Not all who wander are lost. But some who wander may be thirsty, and they should find their way to Broken Compass Brewing. Set in the mountain town of Breckenridge where "taking care of each other is just a part of life," Broken Compass is run by brewmaster and founder Jason Ford, a chemical engineer who says that owning a mountain town brewery is a dream come true. A visit to Broken Compass reveals a community of people enjoying good vibes and good brew. The popular Toasted Coconut Porter is a Great American Beer Festival medal winner, as is the Ginger Pale Ale — a fan favorite for ginger lovers. Barrel-aged beers are always available, thanks to barrels from nearby Breckenridge Distillery. Come for Wacky One-off Wednesdays this summer (and year-round) for a taste of something new each week.

Jessup Farm Barrel House

1921 Jessup Dr., Fort Collins
(970) 568-8345
jessupfarmbarrelhouse.com

It's not easy operating a brewery in a renovated 133-year-old barn. "The concept was built around the location," says Head Brewer and Partner, Jeff Albarella. Surrounded by other renovated farm buildings — now restaurants, coffee shops and retail — this 2016 brewery is filled with barrels and tanks for a truly immersive experience. Climb the stairs to the second-floor former hay loft, and breathe deep to smell the oak barrels, the barrel-aging beer, and the history itself. Unlike other big, bold barrel-aged brews, Jessup Farm's are a bit more nuanced, with a diverse range of sour beers, cream ales, lighter styles and more traditional malt mammoths. Ask about the Fancy Pants, their limited-edition, award-winning Brett IPA brewed with wild yeast.

Aspen Brewing

304 E. Hopkins Ave., Aspen
(970) 920-BREW (2739)
aspenbrewingcompany.com

Celebrating their 10-year anniversary this year, Aspen Brewing has been brewing high-altitude beers since the early days of Colorado's beer boom after founder Duncan Klauss graduated from the University of Colorado to make his brewery business plan a reality. Operating at more than 8,000 feet in elevation using some of the purest water in the state, the brewery's tagline is "downstream from nobody." Don't miss the World Cup Beer Competition gold medal winners, the Independence Pass Ale and the Cloud 9 Saison. This summer, come try the Cloud 9 Saison, a traditional farmhouse ale brewed with Curacao orange peels in celebration of long, sunny days. Later in the fall, the limited-release Double Conundrum Imperial Red Ale is a fresh-hopped staff favorite.

Telluride Brewing Co.

156 Society Dr., Telluride
(970) 728-5094
telluridebrewingco.com

Brewed with pure, fresh water from the Rocky Mountain snowmelt, Telluride Brewing Co. creates their hop and malt goodness in one of Colorado's most beloved mountain towns. Plan to spend some time here when you come to Telluride, and make a point to sample their flagship brews, Bridal Veil Rye Pale Ale and Face Down Brown Ale.

Westbound & Down Brewing Company

1617 Miner St., Idaho Springs
(720) 502-3121
westboundanddown.com

Hit up Westbound & Down on your way west, naturally. This Idaho Springs brewery is the perfect pit-stop on your way to or from Denver via I-70. And with burgers, pizza and more in charming, Old West ambience, you'll want to order Another IPA. Yes, that's the actual beer name.

SquarePeg Brewwerks

625 Main St., Alamosa
(719) 580-7472
squarepegbrewerks.com

If you take a trip to the Sand Dunes, be sure to detour to Alamosa and pay a visit to SquarePeg Brewwerks. This "farm-to-tap" brewery turned golden fields of oats, wheat and barley into the Waverly Tulip historic Dutch beer, which took home gold in the 2017 GABF.

5 Out-of-the-Box Breweries in Denver

Denver is a treasure trove of breweries as unique as can be, and there's plenty to discover without leaving town. Here are our top picks for breweries that stand out from the crowd.

For the Yeast Geek

Crooked Stave Artisan Beer Project

3350 Brighton Blvd., Denver

(720) 550-8860

crookedstave.com

You may have heard others suggest that brewing is both science and art. One brewery that exemplifies this intersection is Crooked Stave Artisan Beer Project. Most of the beers use Brettanomyces yeasts and are matured in oak barrels for greater complexity. "Crooked Stave is currently the only brewery in the country to have both clean, wild, and sour beer that is 100-percent primary fermented in oak foeders (wooden vats) and available in cans," says marketing manager Kaleigh Armitage. Crooked Stave also operates as a distributor, founded to value the artisans as much as the customers. Located in The Source, Crooked Stave offers a variety of tap beers from the Von Pilsner to the popular Nightmare on Brett, a dark sour ale aged in Leopold Bros. whiskey barrels.

Summer sips: Watch for the release of the Vieille, a barrel-aged artisanal saison, available in cans for the first time starting in June. Another must-try is the Key Lime Tau, a golden ale aged in oak with fresh lime peel, lemongrass, and lactose, brewed in collaboration with Hawkshead Brewing in the United Kingdom.

For Every Drinking Ability

Brewability Lab

12445 E. 39th Ave. #314, Denver

(303) 598-0809

brewabilitylab.com

Based on our research, Brewability Lab is the only brewery in the country that employs adults with intellectual and developmental disabilities to brew and serve craft beer. "All beer styles are coordinated by color," says founder Tiffany Fixter, "which makes it easier for our beertenders who are non-readers." Everyone is welcome, and for guests who need special accommodations, Brewability Lab offers noise-cancelling headphones, straws, lighting options, and more. While this alone makes them worth supporting, the beer draws quite the crowd with varieties like the passion fruit kettle sour, nitro coffee stout, and their most popular, the Strawberry Blonde, a five-barrel batch brewed with 50 pounds of strawberries. This summer, the founder will open Pizzability, a pizzeria in Cherry Creek at 250 Steele Street in Denver, with their beer available on tap.

For the Nostalgic Crafter

Grandma's House Beer

1710 S. Broadway, Denver

(303) 578-6754

grandmasbeer.co

While other breweries are known by their roster of beers, Grandma's House is mainly defined by their taproom atmosphere, which is filled with crocheted blankets, old-school video games and plenty of tchotchkes. "Our décor is designed straight out of a grandmother's home in the country," says owner Matthew Fuerst. "While many taprooms aim for a modern or industrial vibe, we opted to be more homey, comfortable, and nostalgic." As for beers, Fuerst suggests the British style he calls How's Your Father, an ESB (Extra Special Bitter) with moderate hop bitterness and flavor. Sake brewery Gaijin 24886 shares their space as well, and influenced the beer called Cut of Your Jib, a rice lager fermented with Sake yeast. Look for the new Imperial Berliner Weisse brewed with tangerines and aged in gin barrels for a —you guessed it— gin- and juice-inspired beer.

For the World Traveler

The Intrepid Sojourner Beer Project

925 W. 8th Ave, Denver

(720) 572-5172

sojournerbeers.com

If there's one thing that sets Colorado apart from other beer drinking communities, it's a sense of adventure and exploration. That's where The Intrepid Sojourner Beer Project comes in. Only about a year old, this brewery aims to showcase flavors from all over the world — thanks to a former archaeologist-turned-brewer who executes traditional styles before turning them on their heads with unique spices, herbs and fruits. The results? A Basil IPA, Pear Saison, Turkish Coffee Stout and Lavender Tripel, to name a few. Featuring frequent international holiday-themed parties, such as Oktoberfest and Día de los Muertos, which include foreign cuisine-inspired brews, special releases, and guest taps.

For the GF Crowd

Holidaily Brewing

801 Brickyard Circle, Golden

(303) 278-BEER (2337)

holidailybrewing.com

We know this one's in Golden, but we're willing to make an exception. After all, for the unlucky people who must avoid drinking beer due to gluten allergies or intolerances, there haven't been many truly gluten-free beers made in Colorado. Enter Holidaily Brewing, where owner Karen Hertz produces quality gluten-free craft beer with Colorado-grown ingredients like millet and buckwheat in place of barley and wheat. To meet growing demand, Holidaily Brewing will open a 10,000-square-foot production facility in early 2019. Enjoy one of 10 gluten-free draft beers on their sunny patio, such as the seasonal Buck-Wit Belgian Ale, an easy drinking gluten-free beer made with coriander and orange peel.

Brews from a Transplant

Epic Brewing

3001 Walnut St, Denver
(720) 539-7410
epicbrewing.com

People born in Colorado — those elusive “Colorado natives” — seem to be fewer and farther between these days. That’s not always true of breweries. However, non-native residents lovingly known as transplants will appreciate Epic Brewing, a craft brewery that started in Utah and planted roots in Denver not long after. Specializing in brewing small batch, artisanal beers from lagers to stouts, Epic believes there is a beer for every person and every occasion. The Big Bad Baptist, an imperial barrel-aged stout brewed with cocoa nibs and coffee beans, is a popular go-to.

Epic expanded from Utah to Denver in 2010, which brought about a new opportunity to expand the barrel-aging program, increase distribution and reach even more craft beer drinkers. This transplant brewery no doubt resonates with many new Denverites, where our diverse population continues to grow and change. This September, visit the brewery for the latest version of their New England IPA as well as their Oak and Orchard series, Epic’s limited-release oak-aged sours.

In December 2017, Epic acquired Telegraph Brewing in Santa Barbara. Their goal? Build up the brand, expand production and strengthen their craft brewing foundations. This summer, don’t miss Epic’s Tart and Juicy IPA, which combines the clean, puckering tartness of kettle souring with citrusy, aromatic hops.

Three Cideries Ripe for Discovery

Your impression of “hard cider” may be a bit antiquated, so feel free to refresh your palate with a visit to an urban cidery. These city spots get to the core of the matter by producing fermented beverages made from pressed apples, then adding their own special spin. Here are three local cideries worth a bushel and a peck.

Haykin Family Cider

12001 E. 33rd Ave., Unit D, Aurora
(720) 242-7292
haykinfamilycider.com

While many people liken ciders to beers, cider making is actually more akin to white winemaking. The cider experts at Haykin Family Cider take this to heart. “Just like winemakers, we try to highlight single varietal ciders so our customers can experience the unique flavor of different apples,” says Co-Founder Talia Haykin. They use only apples, yeast, and primarily Colorado-grown fruit (no flavorings, sugars, or hops) to make small-batch, high-carbonation ciders that are reminiscent of sparkling wine.

C-Squared Ciders

2875 Blake St., Denver
(720) 437-1428
csquaredciders.com

This Denver-based cidery in the heart of RiNo is dedicated to all things cider, and their team is passionate about bringing new flavors to the table. C-Squared uses 100-percent apples in every fermentation for ciders that are balanced, tasty, and with just the right amount of “apple skin freshness.” Visit the taproom and sample their Sailor series, with ciders that are barrel-fermented, wood-aged, and bolstered with wild yeast strains.

Stem Ciders

2811 Walnut St., Ste. 150, Denver
(720) 443-3007
stemciders.com

Stem Ciders is another urban cidery bringing the orchard experience to the big city. Founded in 2013, Stem Ciders presses whole apples from the United States, including Michigan apples (used for their L’Acier and Le Chene ciders) to Colorado crab apples (used for the Crabby Neighbor cider). Watch for special releases like the Salted Cucumber Collaboration cider with The Real Dill, a local artisan pickle company. Now, you can also visit them at their new location, Acreage Ciderhouse & Eatery in Lafayette, Colorado.

8 Distilleries ... for When You Need Something A Little Stronger

Good news, spirits fans: craft distilling is making a name for itself in our state. With access to high-quality ingredients, interesting collaborative opportunities and a thirst for the stronger stuff, more and more new distilleries are opening in Colorado. "Craft distilling is where craft brewing was 15 years ago," says Eric Wilson of Peach Street Distillers in Palisade. When asked if the industry is going through a renaissance, he replies: "A renaissance ... or a race!" Here are eight distilleries you should race to for everything from whiskey to rum, all made right here in the Centennial State.

Rising Sun Distillery

1330 Zuni St., Denver
(303) 534-1788
risingsundistillery.com

Located just outside Downtown Denver, Rising Sun Distillery is a certified organic distillery that uses the high-quality raw ingredients from Colorado and beyond. Traditional spirits including vodka and gin are bolstered by a farmers' market-inspired line including a Colorado Peach Brandy, a Colorado Chile White Whiskey and a Lavender Hibiscus Liqueur made with primarily Colorado-grown produce. Although Rising Sun is only four years old, Owner Dawn Nudell is already a rockstar in the local distilling scene. She spearheaded the creation of the Colorado Spirits Trail, a website and interactive map designed to connect people with the 70+ distilleries in our state. Her motto? "Life's too short not to drink well!" Visit <https://coloradospiritstrail.com/> to learn more.

Summer sips: Visit in August for their annual Peach Party to help pit and process peaches in exchange for peach-inspired cocktails.

Deerhammer

321 E. Main St., Buena Vista
(719) 395-9464
deerhammer.com

Deerhammer founder and head distiller Lenny Eckstein is what he calls "obsessively driven to make authentic, extraordinary whiskey." From sourcing the finest grain from Colorado and beyond, to the 96-hour open fermentation process, to double distilling and minimum two-year maturing in new oak casks, Deerhammer is redefining the flavor of independent American whiskey at the base of Colorado's tallest peaks in the Arkansas River Valley. Deerhammer produces American Single Malt, Bourbon and more, with special releases throughout the year. Come to the tasting room for cocktails and snacks from resident food truck, the Buena Viking.

Summer sips: Be on the lookout for Deerhammer's Rough & Tumble smoked corn whiskey, available at the distillery and around the state starting in June.

Montanya

212 Elk Ave., Crested Butte
(970) 799-3206
montanyarum.com

You may not associate rum with high mountain peaks, but that's what you'll find at Crested Butte's Montanya Rum. Montanya uses just four all-natural ingredients, including non-GMO and American-grown unrefined sugar cane, mountain spring water, yeast and a touch of caramelized local honey. This 100-percent wind-powered and carbon-offset distillery is a completely zero-waste facility, and tasting room guests will notice fully recycled paper products and compostable items as visual examples of the distillery's sustainable initiatives. Visit Crested Butte for the Arts Festival or Crested Butte Film Festival, and make a point to stop at Montanya Rum for cocktails, appetizers and small plates.

Summer sips: Try the Rum Sour Seniorita, made with habanero- and pineapple-infused Montanya Platino Rum, fresh cilantro, agave, and fresh lime.

Woody Creek Distillers

60 Sunset Dr., Basalt
(970) 279-5110
woodycreekdistillers.com

Who knew that distilling could teach us so much about Colorado agriculture? Woody Creek Distillery, located in the Roaring Fork Valley near Aspen, grows and harvests 1.5 million pounds of potatoes every season. These potatoes turn into world-class vodka, Colorado gin, and Colorado straight rye whiskey, which has been awarded the San Francisco World Spirits Competition Double Gold Medal. Visit their tasting room in Basalt Tuesday through Saturday from 2-8 p.m.

Summer sips: This summer, look for Woody Creek at Aspen Food and Wine, the Crested Butte Wine and Food Festival and Denver Food and Wine.

Leopold Bros.

5285 Joliet St., Denver
(303) 307-1515
leopoldbros.com

This well-known distiller touts itself as the only distillery in Colorado that malts their grains onsite. This gives them greater control over the numerous factors in their spirits production, which involves wild fermentation and no artificial flavorings — only real spices, botanicals and fruits. With an effort toward sustainability and water conservation, Leopold Bros. produces more than 24 spirits, more than any other Colorado distillery, including their Absinthe Verte and Maryland-Style Rye Whiskey, a seasonal spirit released in November.

Summer sips: Look for Leopold's Summer Gin available starting in May.

Peach Street Distillers

144 South Kluge Ave., Building #2, Palisade
(970) 464-1128
peachstreetdistillers.com

"We've got good water and a lot of sunshine," says Eric Wilson of Peach Street Distillers on Colorado's Western Slope. That water comes from the top of Grand Mesa, where hundreds of natural lakes provide the Grand Valley's water supply — and also make for high-quality spirits. Opened in 2005, Peach Street is the state's oldest locally owned distillery, surrounded by vineyards and orchards to supply their eau de vie fruit brandies, botanical gins and Colorado Straight Bourbon, among other spirits. Head Distiller Davy Lindig ensures their spirits are creative, top-quality and as local as possible, with fruit that is often picked, prepped and in the fermentation tanks within a 24-hour period. Visit the taproom to try their famous Bloody Mary and rotating vodka infusions.

Summer sips: This July, Peach Street's Bloody Mary mix will be sold in 32-ounce bottles at liquor stores statewide.

Jessie Unruh

Breckenridge Distillery

1925 Airport Rd., Breckenridge
(970) 547-9759
breckenridgedistillery.com

If you're a bucket list person, then you'll want to visit Breckenridge Distillery, which happens to be the world's highest distillery. Surrounded by snowy peaks, Breckenridge Distillery's mineral-rich water creates a clean taste and smooth finish in their spirits, be it bourbon, gin or vodka. Visit for a free tour and an inside look at their process and production facility.

Summer sips: Camp 90 Proof kicks off on June 30, with a summer music series, yoga, cocktail demonstrations and chances to win distillery swag.

Meredith Austin

Golden Moon Distillery

412 Violet St., Golden
(303) 993-7174
goldenmoondistillery.com

Founded in 2008, Golden Moon Distillery produces handcrafted herbal liquors and liqueurs using age-old production processes. In fact, founder Stephen Gould's research library houses hundreds of rare books on distillation that date back as far as the 16th Century. From gin and grappa to absinthe and applejack, Golden Moon is known for its classy lineup of spirits available in the distillery tasting room or at their cocktail lounge, Golden Moon Speakeasy.

Summer sips: Swoon over the Golden Moon's Crème de Violette, distilled with hand-selected botanicals and blue violet flowers, perfect in an aviation cocktail or on its own.

EAT, DRINK, WALK, REPEAT

Denver Does Brunch Al Fresco

By Eric Elkins

Even though Denver locals know how to make the most of a warm Wednesday evening or a perfect Tuesday powder day, weekends bring something that even the above-average weekday can't truly provide: brunch. Between our temperate climate, active lifestyles, and a love of making the most of each day, Denver knows how to turn a weekend meal into an epic afternoon.

And we don't tend to settle into one spot to drink and dine the day away — although it can happen. No, we're a peripatetic lot, never content to stay in one spot for too long. Brunch in Denver is all about a daytime wander, starting with a friend or two, picking up others along the way, finding that next perfect bloody maria or slice of pain perdu. It's a rolling confab of pals — some post-hike, some recovering from the night before, some pre-gaming for an evening of fun.

Any Saturday or Sunday — especially Sunday — you'll find roving packs of contented carousers strolling through the neighborhoods of the city. Because Denver rarely gets too hot or too cold, patios are our jam. The hint of a sunny day has us dining al fresco, drinking on rooftops, and settling into outdoor coffeeshops.

So, to help you live like a local, here are outdoor brunch itineraries that you can follow (or not) as you see fit. I've generally kept options within an easy walk of each other, with a few necessary exceptions.

The High-End LoHi Culinary Tour

Looking for finer eats within just a few blocks? Make your way to the LoHi neighborhood for a slew of ideal brunches.

Carnivores should start with the meat-heavy Old Major, where Chef Justin Brunson shares his deep love and devotion for all things pig-related. The patio is small but lively and abuts the bar, which means your Night Train Brunch Punch will arrive quickly.

If you're a fan of Top Chef, you'll want to check in on Denver's own Chef Carrie Baird around the corner at Bar Dough. She crushed it week after week last season, winning quickfire challenges with her signature fancy toasts. Brunch at Bar Dough is an elevated offering, Italian-inspired, but not beholden. Whatever you do, be sure to order a spritz — pick your variation and enjoy.

I'm just going to say it. The Bindery is the most gorgeous, innovative, new restaurant in Denver. Saunter down the hill from Bar Dough to find a warm and inviting space with high windows and loads of natural light. The wild and approachable menu will draw you in, and the stellar staff, headed up by chef-hero-owner-designer-magician Linda Hampsten Fox, will charm you. Drop in for a latte and a life-changing Portuguese custard tartlet, or stay for seasonal brunch items (duck prosciutto, hello!) and a deep wine list. The Bindery feels like a spot in London or Paris, with an easy, welcoming vibe.

While you're down on Central Street, stroll a block over to Candela Latin Kitchen for a Capicu pick-me-up (Fernet, Rum, and Coke!), two kinds of ceviche, and affordable Latin-inspired brunch items from Chef Jesse Vega's family recipes. Oh, and try a spicy michelada before you go.

The LoHi Crawl

More in the mood for bites and brews? Start with snacks and mimosas at Avanti Food and Beverage. The hipster food court startup incubator has one of the best rooftop patios in the city, with a view of downtown and southward, and a crew of kick-ass bartenders. The range of options changes regularly, which means you have a ton of tasty items to choose from.

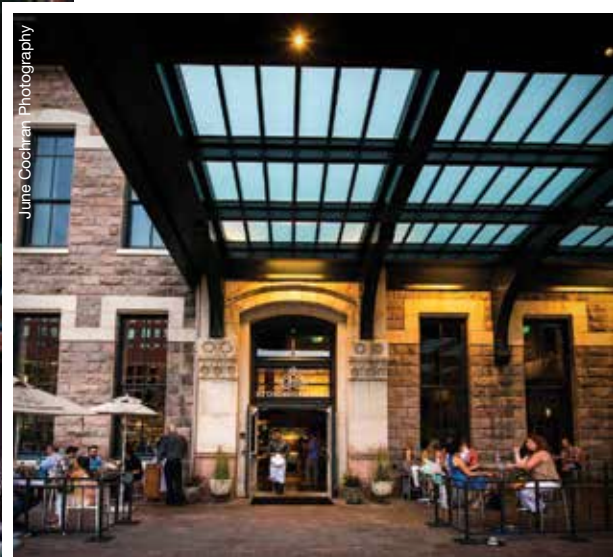

From Avanti, walk just a couple blocks up to Recess Beer Garden, with its vast, multi-level patio area. Grab a giant corn dog, pick out your beer, and put up your feet or get yourself into a round of cornhole. Love dogs? You'll find a ton hanging here with their chill owners.

Someone in your crew more in tune with bruschetta and prosecco? Right along the same alleyway is Postino. And Bamboo Sushi, nestled right between the two, just launched its own brunch. You could spend a whole day enjoying this little row of indoor/outdoor spots.

Finally, hoof it over to Low Country Kitchen, just on the other side of the park. Bypass the sidewalk patio and head straight upstairs to the rooftop deck. Grab a chicken biscuit, sip a pickled whiskey sour (trust me on that), and generate your vitamin D.

Downtown Rounds

Truth: You could do serious damage without leaving the Union Station complex and feel pretty damn good about yourself. With James Beard award-winner Alex Seidel's Mercantile Dining & Provision, Kimball Musk's Next Door, Chef Jen Jasinski's seafood restaurant Stoic & Genuine (Best. Burger. In Denver. Not a hyperbole.), and the all-around classic brunch spot Snooze, you could get nice and sloshy and a belly full of goodness without walking more than a few steps in any direction.

But if you did that, you'd miss out on Avelina, just up the block, with its crispy duck hash and shrimp and grits. You'd miss Kachina Cantina's guac sampler. And Urban Farmer's tableside steak tartare (it's so damn good).

Speaking of Chef Jasinski, consider treating yourself to a short tour of the Denver institutions that bear her imprimatur, starting with the adorable Bistro Vendôme, with its intimate patio tucked away off Larimer Square. Start with classic French-style mussels in white wine sauce (get some frites to dip), or dig right into duck confit eggs benedict. Then pop across the street to Spain... er... Rioja, for cocktails and sweet potato hash with smoked salmon roulade. While you're at it, stumble around the corner to Jasinski's less-fancy, but still tasty, Euclid Hall for beer and brats. Or at least dig into duck poutine. (And yes, I love all things duck.)

RiNo Ramble

RiNo Art District is becoming more and more walkable, which is good news when you want to intersperse your drinking and dining with wanders through local art galleries and shops.

CALL, which just opened in the spring, is generating a ton of buzz for a small-but-delectable menu of edible wonders. The patio is gorgeous, and the perfect place to take in sunlight while sipping at a Morning Bell cocktail.

Then roll over to Julep, for — you know it — southern delights like succotash with poached eggs or chicken and waffles. Cool off with a Pimm's Cup and watch the delightful show that is Denver's downtown day drinkers at their hilarious finest walking along the street below.

The massive patio at RiNo Beer Garden is always a party, with solid brunch bites and rows of taps that seem to go on forever. You could stop for a beer or two, chomp on a "RiNo Hang-over," or crush the bottomless mimosas.

Starting to fade from the heavy food and alcohol haze? Amble down to Denver Central Market, grab a coffee from Crema, a sampling of meats and cheeses from Cured, a bit o' ceviche from Tammen's Fish Market (or maybe fresh pastries from Izzio's), and lazily consume it all on the patio. Or surrender to the haze and order a cocktail at Curio to go with it.

Capitol Hill Crawl

Just to the east of downtown is a concentration of brunch spots with a variety of dining experiences, all pretty much on the same street.

Stop in at Steuben's, a restaurant that put a pin in the Cap Hill map as a dining destination, or start next door at sister restaurant Ace Eat Serve, where you can get killer Asian-inspired dishes and play a few games of ping pong to keep the blood pumping. One of the most talented pastry chefs in all of Denver, Nadine Donovan, keeps the delectables at both spots on point, so be sure to indulge in whatever she has on the menu that day.

Down the street is Beast & Bottle, and though the patio is small, the menu isn't. Choose from the shared dishes (deli-style fish board? Yes, please!), and do not miss the lamb pastrami hash. Drink something bubbly and watch the world go by.

Next, walk up to D Bar, originally a dessert spot headed by celeb chef Keegan Gerhard, now a mecca for hearty food and magical sweets, from the legendary Cake & Shake to seasonal specials.

Or continue your stroll down 17th Avenue, stopping in at Dos Santos, Watercourse (for strictly delicious vegetarian fare), or OneFold for congee (with duck confit!) and eggs.

Eric's Tips for All-Day Brunching

If you think you can handle a day of drinking and dining in Denver, don't forget you're in a dry climate at a high altitude. That means the alcohol works faster. Here are three things to keep in mind:

Drink a TON of water — Locals know to drink at least a glass of water for every cocktail or beer. Sure, you'll need to make more runs to the restroom, but it beats the crushing dehydration headache that's sure to follow if you're spending the day tipping in the sun.

Be snacktacular — Eat. Whether it's a slow graze of small plates at each new stop, or a few heavy dishes to lay in a foundation, the food is damn good, and eating will keep you from getting too trashed too early in the day.

Stop for coffee — I love nothing more than taking a break from the sun and suds by stopping into an air-conditioned coffee shop for a cappuccino. Caffeine and coolness can keep you going.

Southside Stroll

Even though it's not an easy walk from here to more outdoor brunch spots, I can't write about patio dining without sharing a reco for Interstate Kitchen & Bar in the Santa Fe Arts District (disclosure: It's co-owned by one of my very best friends). With bar full o' bourbon, and brunch items galore, you could get in a lot of trouble right there, whiling away your day sipping at their enormous whiskey list while tucking in on comfort foods like hanger steak and eggs or a hot brown sandwich.

Your next move could go a couple different ways. You might stick to Sante Fe, taking in the art galleries and supplementing with snacks from Joe Maxx Coffee or wending your way down the street to old school Mexican deliciousness at El Noa Noa.

Or, you could grab a Lyft a few blocks away to the Baker District and enjoy a walkable feast of brunchy options, starting with Broadway's stalwart, The Hornet. Get yourself a prime rib hash, or go indulgent with sea salt caramel bread pudding. After that, maybe cross the street to Punch Bowl Social, where you can eat in the sun before knocking down some bowling pins inside.

If you're having a beer day (all of the above places on this tour have a healthy mix of local pints), don't miss rooftop at Historians Ale House (sister to RiNo Beer Garden), with its rich and delicious pub fare and huge beer selection.

Even though it's kind of cheating to mention Gozo's fancy-yet-affordable brunch, if you order a cold-brew negroni and sit by one of their open garage doors, you'll still feel like you're outside.

But the best patio on Broadway would be down the block at Illegal Pete's. Select a giant burrito with all your faves, order a beer, and then spend the rest of the day playing bocce, snacking, and drinking. It's a consummate Colorado experience, and the perfect way to finish off your brunch tour.

Whether you find yourself sprawled in a booth for hours, ordering drinks and new bites as the feeling hits, or doing the full brunch-and-walk-and-brunch-some-more, Denver has the outdoor weekend dining options to keep you warm, fed, and happily hazy all day long.

Enjoy.

& 1 more thing

Please and thank you — Even if you're truly hangry, a smile, some basic courtesy, and a bit of patience goes a long way with your servers. Remember, they were probably working late the night before, and had to be back in time to feed the early risers. Working brunch can be a full-on sprint for hours at a time, so be gracious and tip generously.

A Painted Town

From vibrant street art to world-class museums, Denver's burgeoning art scene is a celebration of expertise, innovation, and vivid imagination.

by Jamie Siebrase

When The New York Times named Denver one of its 52 places to visit in 2018, it revealed a secret Denverites have delighted in for decades: Art has seized the city, and there's no sign of retreat. You're only in town for a limited time, so here's what you do... Choose your own adventure in the pages ahead to experience Denver's artistic highlights and hotspots.

See Where Art is Made

Local artists Tracy Weil (weilworks.com) and Jill Hadley-Hooper (hadleyhooper.com) breathed new life into Denver's industrial corridor in 2005, when they formed the River North Art District. Known as RiNo to locals, this hip downtown neighborhood has become an incubator for Denver's artsy types, and home to an estimated 400 artists, illustrators, photographers, architects, designers, and makers.

"We're where art is made," Weil says, reciting the district's catchy motto.

Weil isn't exaggerating. In addition to art studios galore, RiNo clenches 22 galleries and a handful of creative collectives. The district also boasts the largest concentration of breweries and cideries in the region — and that's a good thing, seeing as craft beer is to art viewing what Marilyn Monroe was to Andy Warhol. (Just trust us on that.)

You can roam the district at your own pace, but the best time to experience RiNo's explosive energy is during the first Friday of the month, from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m., when area artists open their doors to the public during First Friday Art Walk.

If you only have one afternoon to spare, make it count with this RiNo cheat sheet.

Start on the south side of town, at The Temple, 2400 Curtis St., and Redline, 2350 Arapahoe St., two community pillars with impressive studio artist programs and beautiful galleries.

Explore the galleries and businesses on Walnut Street beginning with Great Basin Studio at 2540 Walnut St. Here, the fabulous works of internationally acclaimed artist William Matthews adorn the walls. Stop in for a quick flight at Stem Ciders, 2811 Walnut St., before cutting over to Blake Street, where you'll find B-SPOT Pop Up, 2750 Blake St., and the Studios on Blake, 3040 Blake St., featuring a cutting-edge gallery and 14 studios.

Order whatever's on tap at Ratio Beerworks, 2920 Larimer St., or Epic Brewing Company, 3001 Walnut St., then visit Dry Ice Factory, 3300 Walnut St., foolPRooft contemporary art, 3240 Larimer St., and Millers & Rossi, an art speakeasy with delicious bites and a strong craft cocktail program.

Helikon Gallery & Studios, 3675 Wynkoop St., is next, followed by Zeppelin Station, 3501 Wazee St., Denver's latest food hall, containing the RiNo Made store, open daily at 11 a.m., stocked with unique products from neighborhood artists.

Wander a block east to Beloved Community Village, Denver's first tiny home community, a radical experiment and architectural marvel. Head north to Blue Moon Brewing Company, 3750 Chestnut Pl., for another flight, before catching a ride to Blue Silo Studios, 4701 National Western Dr.

The artful afternoon ends at the Globeville Riverfront Art Center, 888 E. 50th Ave., a conglomerate where more than 80 visual artists work in a variety of media, from painting, photography, and ceramics to printmaking, jewelry, illustration, and fiber.

Get Street Smart

You won't find colorful graffiti and spray-painted murals in a traditional museum, and that's the whole point of street art, an outsider form that's activating many Denver neighborhoods, most notably the River North Art District.

There are 140 outdoor murals on display in RiNo, where art is accessible and impermanent — and all the more appealing to Thomas “Detour” Evans, one of Colorado’s hottest street artists.

“In a rapidly changing city, things are going to be temporary, and you have to try not to hold on to too much,” says the unassuming 33-year-old painter. Blame it on his transitive military upbringing: Evans mastered the art of letting go in adolescence, after discovering that his creative prowess helped him connect with unfamiliar faces in an exhaustive succession of new communities.

Evans moved to Colorado to pursue a degree in business. When he took a side job painting live art onstage at Ophelia’s Electric Soapbox, he found himself at home — at last — in Denver’s lively community of nontraditional artists.

Evans painted his first mural in 2016, at CRUSH, RiNo’s blowout street art and graffiti festival, held annually in September. In addition to learning a new medium (spray paint), Evans had to “scale up,” from small canvases to a garage door-sized wall on Larimer Street, where he created a portrait of a woman he’d just met.

Evans “caught the bug,” he says. At the same time, Denver got hooked on Evans, gravitating toward his bright, bold images of diversity and the immigrant experience.

Evans has embellished dozens of walls, alleyways, and garage doors throughout RiNo and the greater Denver area. Some of his murals have been covered, but Evans estimates at least 10 are currently on view.

One of the artist’s favorite projects is his avant-garde depiction of pianist Charles Mingus, brightening a garage door near the entrance of Nocturne Jazz & Supper Club, 1330 27th Street. To get a sense of his range, visit the Volunteers of America Building at 2600 Larimer St., where Evans produced large-scale flowers to accompany a portrait by Patrick Kane McGregor. His latest mural, off Helikon Gallery & Studios, 3675 Wynkoop St., depicts — in the artist’s hallmark, colorful style — a friend named Sophia.

You can catch Thomas “Detour” Evans anytime on Instagram (@detour303) or at his studio at Redline, 2350 Arapahoe St., until late 2018, when he plans to return to his previous digs at The Temple, 2400 Curtis St.

Art-Cycle

Accessible from the flagship REI store, 1416 Platte St., the Cherry Creek Trail is an outstanding addition to Denver’s public art program, with murals painted by teams of local and international artists, including Denverites Jaime Molina, Pedro Barrios and Joseph Martinez, as well as Brazilian street artists Bruno Novelli, Claudio Ethos, Alexandre Orion, and Alex Horne. Hosted by Denver’s Urban Arts Fund, bike mural tours take off throughout the summer months, from the Denver B-cycle area east of REI. Psst: B-cycle is Denver’s bike share program; if you’re visiting from out of town, rent a bike through B-cycle prior to joining a tour group.

3 Essential Pieces of Public Art Every Tourist Must See

A full list of Denver's public art collection is available at artsandvenuesdenver.com/public-art (click "The Denver Public Art Collection"). If you don't have time to view everything, our must-sees are as follows:

1. Lawrence Argent's I See What You Mean, the big blue bear at the Colorado Convention Center, on 14th Street between Stout and California streets.
2. The 23 bronze and aluminum sculptures cast in metal comprising the Fourteenth Street Overlay, created by Pennsylvania artists Wes Heiss and Marek Walczak.
3. Patrick Marold's solar-illuminated, beetle-kill log masterpiece Shadow Array, on display near Denver International Airport, where you'll also find Mustang, the infamous, neon-eyed fiberglass beast that killed its creator, sculptor Luis Jimenez.

Take a Free Public Art Tour

If you're adamantly opposed to PDAs (public displays of art, not affection), then you've landed in the wrong city. Through its public art program, Denver has amassed more than 400 public pieces of outdoor artwork — approximately three-fourths the amount lining New York's streets.

Free guided public art tours are offered all summer long in 14 Denver districts. For a full list of public art tours, visit <http://www.artsandvenuesdenver.com/public-art/denver-public-art-tours>, where you can reserve your spot on a tour in advance.

The 14th Street Public Art Tour meets on June 7 at 5:30 p.m., near The Corner Office, 1401 Curtis St., at the All Together Now streetscape, composed of a 60-foot-long yellow aluminum wall and 45-foot-tall urban toy. On this tour, art lovers explore the Denver Theater District's playful collection, which pairs some of Denver's oldest murals (by Allen True) with recent works, such as Jonathan Borofsky's immense fiberglass Dancers.

Kicking off at 6 p.m. on June 6 and June 20, the City Park Public Art Tour introduces spectators to half a dozen artworks, including the historic sculptures, fountains, and gateways of City Park, as well as Avian Front, located along the south end of the Denver Zoo. Meet at the Thatcher Fountain at 17th Avenue and City Park Esplanade to participate.

Golden Triangle Public Art Tours cover a wide range of historical and contemporary public artworks, from the classic 20th century bronze sculptures of Alexander Proctor's On the War Trail and Broncho Buster, to the big red chair with a miniature horse by Donald Lipski. Tours begin at 5:30 p.m. on June 13, June 27, July 11, and July 25. They meet at McNichols Civic Center Building, 144 W. Colfax Ave.

Visit Denver's Museums

Known as the Golden Triangle Creative District, Denver's unofficial museum district is concentrated in the triangular area bounded by Speer Blvd., Colfax Ave., and Lincoln St. Here, visitors discover a sophisticated neighborhood comprised of eight museums, 50-plus galleries, and plenty of fine art studios and specialty stores.

Denver Art Museum's (DAM) 146,000-square-foot Hamilton Building, 100 W. 14th Avenue, anchors the Golden Triangle Creative District with its high-caliber collection, international exhibits, and some really inventive programming.

General admission is free for all DAM visitors 18 and under, and the museum caters to young connoisseurs with an array of hands-on DIY projects scattered throughout 10 gallery spaces, as well as a first-floor studio space, where guests of all ages can create art projects keyed to the theme of the moment and, on weekends, watch live demonstrations by practicing artists.

DAM rings in the last Friday of every month with Untitled, 6 p.m. to 10 p.m., an opportunity for guests to mingle with artists over drinks and live music. The programming corresponds with the Final Friday Art Walk – often called “Final Fridays” – a chance for art enthusiasts to check out the restaurants, museums, galleries, secret studios, and storefronts in the Golden Triangle Creative District, June through September, 5 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Summer Exhibits at the DAM

Through August 12, see the first major museum exhibition of Brooklyn-based Choctaw-Cherokee painter and sculptor Jeffrey Gibson. Jeffrey Gibson: Like a Hammer chronicles a pivotal moment in the artist's career, when his contemporary artistic practice converged with his Native American heritage. The exhibit includes 65 objects created from 2011 to present, encompassing beaded punching bags, painted works on rawhide and canvas, and video.

New Territory: Landscape Photography Today launches on June 24, with more than 80 contemporary landscape photographs exploring the dramatic ways artists stretch the boundaries of traditional landscape photography.

Eyes On: Julie Buffalohead opening July 29, showcases new work by the Minnesota-based artist, who is a citizen of the Ponca Tribe of Oklahoma. The exhibition corresponds thematically with Eyes On: Shimabuku, a video by Japan-based artist Shimabuku, as well as Stampede: Animals in Art.

Walker Fine Art, 300 W. 11th Ave., is one of the neighborhood's best-kept secrets. Manna for contemporary art addicts, this space features realism and abstraction through mixed media, experimental photography, installation, and sculpture. A balanced mixture of local, national, and international artists cycle through four exhibition-level galleries. Summer exhibitions include Mark Makers, closing July 7, featuring Ellen Moershel, Patricia Finley, Brigan Gresh, Julie Maren, Brandon Reese, Mary Mackey, Ana Zanic, and Conscious Surrender, opening July 13, with work by Anna Charney, Ben Strawn, Sara Pittman, Deidre Adams, Carol Browning, David Mazza.

Denver's Other Big Art Museum

The 27,000-square foot, environmentally sustainable Museum of Contemporary Art Denver, 1485 Delgany St., elevates the local art scene from Denver's lower downtown district, with its experimental brand of rotating contemporary exhibits. Directed by mastermind Adam Lerner, MCA Denver is a truly innovative forum that never fails to inspire and challenge patrons of all ages and artistic leanings. Case in point: Honey. On view through August 26, Denver-based photographer Kristen Hatgi Sink's sticky exhibition is a series of videos featuring the subject (honey) dripping and pouring over composed objects and people.

Denver Art Museum packs a lot of punch, but it certainly isn't the district's only gem. Next door, the Clyfford Still Museum, 1250 Bannock St., is a seductive, 28,500-square-foot minimalist institution dedicated specifically to the work of its namesake, an abstract expressionist, the bulk of whose work was hidden from public view for decades.

In March, the Kirkland Museum of Fine & Decorative Art relocated to 1201 Bannock St., bringing to the Golden Triangle three collections containing more than 30,000 works by more than 1,500 artists and designers. The museum also keeps the estate collection of Vance Kirkland, the Colorado painter whose works have received more than 350 exhibitions at 70 museums and 35 universities across 13 countries.

Unlike a traditional museum, Kirkland Museum arranges its art salon-style, showing its fine art (paintings and sculpture) alongside a vast assemblage of international decorative art that has been recognized as one of the most important displays in North America, with notable examples of every major design period from Arts & Crafts through Postmodern.

Technically speaking, The ART, a hotel, isn't a museum. But step inside the portico-like entrance of this 165-room boutique hotel, and you'll definitely get an expertly curated, museum-quality vibe, owing in part to the fact that the chic building's 38 pieces of artwork were arranged by Diane Vanderlip, Denver Art Museum's former curator of modern and contemporary art.

While some pieces adorn open spaces and meeting rooms, many are concentrated in Portico Gallery, where you'll find commissioned work from renowned national and international artists. It's impossible to miss Leo Villalare's Untitled, an entryway spectacle made of 24,000 LED lights that illuminate in a sequence that will never repeat itself. Be sure to look for Frank Gehry's laminate, silicone, and wood Fish Lamp, Big Sweep, as well as the polyurethane coated steel and aluminum broom and dustpan created by European artists Claes Oldenburg and Coosje Van Bru.

Bonus: FIRE Lounge (inside The ART, a hotel) is a great spot to rest your legs between museums. You can't go wrong with Colorado lamb sliders and a smoked Manhattan.

Go Gallery Hopping

Claiming the largest concentration of art galleries in Colorado, Denver's 15-year-old Art District on Santa Fe is the best place to gallery hop. On the blocks of Santa Fe Dr. between 5th and 11th Avenues, visitors are greeted by 30 galleries interspersed with studios and cooperatives, theaters, museums, murals, breweries, and international restaurants. (The full district is a rectangle running north-south from 13th St. to W. Alameda Ave., and east-west from Inca to Kalamath streets.

We're currently digging artist Scott Young, represented by RULE gallery, 530 Santa Fe Dr., whose sexy neon pieces are literally lighting up the town, starting with Wish You Were Here, the flickering sculpture attached to the Museum of Contemporary Art Denver, 1485 Delgany St.

Denver's Art District on Santa Fe is a membership-based organization, and its affiliates are constantly hosting their own events, openings, and exhibits. For a calendar listing of all district happenings, visit denversartdistrict.org/events.

Rain or shine, the First Friday Art Walk draws thousands of art enthusiasts the first Friday of every month, 6 p.m. to 9 p.m., when artists open their studio doors, and galleries throw down, too, with appetizers, drinks, music, and live performances. On these bustling nights, every corner and cranny in the district is packed with art, and parking is limited — which is why we recommend taking the RTD Light Rail to the 10th and Osage station, eight blocks south of Santa Fe Dr.

On third Fridays, Collector Preview Events are a tinier version of First Fridays, offering a more intimate experience for aficionados interested in one-on-one time with gallery owners and artists. Art on Film is a popular summertime offering; on the final Wednesdays in June, July, and August, artsy films are aired al fresco, in the parking lot of Su Teatro, 721 Santa Fe Dr., a nonprofit arts complex emphasizing Latino heritage.
